

GOVERNOR Ade Adamson

I'm from Sunderland originally, but moved to Hull to go to University, studying Psychology and Biology, and just never went back. I had intended to go into teaching, but decided to join the local constabulary instead. I've now been a Police Officer for over 20 years, meeting my wife Nicola when I first started. I worked in uniform in Hull for 7 years before starting my CID career. In that time I've worked in various crime units, but have spent over ten years investigating sexual offences, internet offences and domestic violence. It's very hard sometimes, and can be extremely stressful, but it's also really rewarding work. I'm currently a Detective Sergeant working in the East Riding dealing with referrals for children and vulnerable adults. I also give talks at local schools and groups about internet safety.

I've been married to Nicola for over 17 years and we have two girls; one now at Longcroft and the other still at Molescroft. Both love it here and my eldest still visits now and again; always a mole. I've been a parent governor for just over four years and it's been a steep learning curve for someone without a background in education. I'm still learning. I've recently taken over as chair of the governing body after Tony stepped down. I've got some pretty big shoes to fill, but with the support of Michael, the incredible staff and the rest of the governors, I'm sure we'll continue to work hard and support the school now, and in the future.
